N. R. A. COMMITTEE PLANNING PARADE

The regular weekly meeting of the local N. R. A. Compliance Board was held Tuesday evening at the City Hall, Mr. Paul Selmi, chairman, presided.

Plans for the parade on November 7 are being taken care of by a committee. Mr. Le Roy Johnston, of 140 Los Banos avenue, is the chairman of the Parade committee. Every organization in Daly City which intends to enter this parade has already or will shortly appoint a chairman from their organization to have full power to represent his or her order, and are to get in touch with Mr. Johnston for their instructions.

Information in regard to time of march, as well as the assembling place will be given out in plenty of time.

Do you want to participate in a county wide rally? Want to see a big parade? Street dance? Then go to Burlingame tonight, Friday, October 20, at 7 P. M. There is to be a gigantic night parade and afterwards prominent speakers from Washington, D. C., will proceed to speak on the subject uppermost in everybody's mind today, N. R. A. The rally after the parade will be held in the illuminated baseball diamond at Burlingame park.

Last Monday evening, the ladies of the N. R. A. met in the City Hall, with Mrs. H. S. Andersen presiding. There was quite a discussion held relative to the fact that people need to be educated in the N. R. A. movement. The outcome of this discussion was the decision to hold study periods every Thursday afternoon at the City Hall. In this class will be three ladies from each organization in Daly City, Colma and Lawndale.

Don't forget to turn in your complaints in writing to the local N. R. A. Compliance Board. Your little difficulty can be strightened out very nicely.

Grass Fire Calls Out Local Volunteer Firemen

The grass fire that started in the vicinity of the Mission Auto Camp, at Hillside boulevard, last Monday, was finally brought under control after an intense three hour battle by members of the Daly City water department and a few volunteer firemen. When the men fighting the blaze saw that the reservoir and a dwelling might be endangered, an alarm was turned in and the other firemen joined the crew. At last their efforts were rewarded.

Later on the same day another fire started at Hillside boulevard, near Smith's lumber yard, and swept across the hill up near Our Lady of Perpetual Help church.

The firemen, the members of the Daly City police department and the Daly City water company deserve a great deal of credit for their splendid work performed in the intense heat of both weather and fire.

OUTFALL SEWER FOR THREE CITIES NOT FEASIBLE

A joint outfall sewer for San Mateo, Burlingame and Hillsborough is not feasible, according to a report by engineers of the three cities presented to the San Mateo city council.

Two alternative proposals were offered in the report, prepared by City Manager E. P. Wilsey, San Mateo; City Engineer George A. Kneese, Hillsborough, and City Engineer C. M. Thomas, Burlingame. One proposes an outfall to serve San Mateo and the south part of Hillsborough. The other proposes an outfall for joint use of the north part of San Mateo and the south portion of Burlingame.

The report by the three engineers was ordered when San Mateo advised the other two cities three weeks ago she would apply for a $125,000 N. R. A. loan to build an outfall and invited them to join the propect.

BIG TIME HORSES AT FALL MEETING

Carloads of well known thoroughbreds are arriving daily at Tanforan from the important tracks of the East. The fall racing at Tanforan opens Wednesday, November 1, for a forty day session. A program of rich stakes is proving to be a lure for many of the leading establishments of the "big time."

Galloping on the main course early each morning is a certain sign that the opening is fast approaching. Horses from the other side of the continent or from the Middle West have been keyed up all summer and after a short rest, will be ready for saddling for contests out on the mile oval. The home colony members will have to be worked steadily to bring them to form keen enough to hold the invading hosts.

Improvements and changes for the comfort of the patrons at the popular plant down on the peninsula are proceeding expeditiously under the watchful eye of General Manager Ralph C. MacArthur. In beautiful setting at the base of the San Bruno Mountains, with the blue waters of San Francisco Bay in the range of vision, Tanforan never fails to fascinate the newcomer. Quite a number of Easterners are already here for the meet and have written to the folks at home about their favorable impressions.

Henry Potter Russell, chairman of the Advisory Board at Tanforan, has been meeting daily with other members of the Board since his return from New York, Chicago and other racing centers, and is highly encouraged with developments. Chairman Russell is a breeeder and campaigner of thoroughbreds and is showing a remarkable aptitude in his new duties in putting over the forthcoming period of the sport with a bang.

Not so long ago Colonel E. R. Bradley's filly Bazaar was the victor in the historic Hopeful Stakes and as the dam of Silver Hue, is a granddaughter of the Epsom Derby winner Spearmint. Henry Russell has a great interest in the flying winner. Down at the Russell haras at Carmel is standing Eagle Head, a grandson of Spearmint, and his first "crop" will soon be racing in the Russell colors. The Spearmint blood has been potent for a long time on either the top line of the distaff side.

In the former days of breeding in California the Musket strain was well known, principally through stallions and broodmare at Rancho del Paso. Musket was the grandsire of Spearmint, through Carbino. At the Sacramento farm of the late James B. Haggin were both sons of Musket and daughters of his son Trenton. It was the Musket blood that was being sought in the old times and it is the Musket blood the modern experts, such as Colonel Bradley and the California breeder, are still seeking.

Judicious importations were made from Australia by various California breeders a generation and more ago and before long it is likely the custom will be revived. The Musket line and other families in the southern hemisphere have a way of producing colts and fillies that possess both speed and stamina, and what is more can handle weight.

Henry Quagulli, Burlingame insurance man, was slugged and robbed by two men shortly after 10 o'clock last Sunday night when he parked his auto at the Belmont tavern, according to his report to the police.

MINERS TO HOLD IMPORTANT MEET

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

Codification of provisions for the well being of the mining industry will be made at a convention to be held in San Francisco next Tuesday. The meeting has been called by the Mining Association of California. It is also aimed to form a national association that will be representative of the gold mining interests of the United States.

A special effort will be made to have operators from Alaska at the session as it is the opinion of many experts the next great world strike will take place in that territory. In the call sent out by the Mining Association distinct mention is made of the importance of Alaskans attending.

A section of the call is as follows: "Our action has been dictated solely by the increasing confusion resulting from the lack of an association representative of the entire industry, and the fact that as no other organizaiton has signified its willingness to act it remained for ourselves to undertake this duty in behalf of us all."

I learn from that breezy publication, the Alaska Weekly, that Ralph Boyker, who as far back as 1896 was placer mining at Circle City, has returned to his first love and is a miner once more. In recent years Mr. Boyker has been in the hotel business. This time it is quartz mining that has called the veteran. In regard to his return to mining, Mr. Boyker said:

"You know when a man once cleans up a nice bunch of gold he can never get it out of his blood; he always is yearning to get back into the best game of all. The world needs gold and I have a property which will produce it at a good profit, so I am going to get busy."

The Boyker property, which is about eighteen miles north of Grants Pass, Oregon, has been examined by several mining engineers of high standing and all of the reports are favorable. The Greenback, less than two miles away, recovered six million dollars.

As to the probability of good results from the mine, Mr. Boyker said: "For many years John Hall, who staked the property, which is on Graves Creek, mined it by hand methods and recovered thirty-five to forty thousand dollars with an arrasta. After his death, when the property came into the possession of Mrs. Boyker and her sister, I became interested in it. After doing 2,500 feet of tunneling on the seven claims we own and opening up various ore bodies of good commercial grade we are all set for a mill and machinery."

The Manitoba Government has carried out provisions for a new mining law and appointed a Mining Board of three members to pass on disputes relating to mineral claims.

The Bridge River Ogden Mines, Ltd., composed of the Ogden, Chesterfield, and Short O'Bacon groups, will offer a limited share issue in the near future. Considerable preliminary work has been done, revealing values that warrant extensive development, according to the officers. Fourteen claims and fractions are included in the property and it is believed the Bralorne vein system continues through the Ogden ground.

A new company, known as the Helena Gold Mines, Ltd., has taken over the Georgia River Gold Mines, Ltd., and an extensive diamond drilling and tunneling program will be continued by Helena. Development of the Georgia River property will be carried on by the new company.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH HEARS RUSSIAN EXILE

Last Sunday night Mr. Nicholai Siberiacoff was the speaker in Grace Presbyterian church, and those who were able to hear this most interesting speaker heard the inside story of what is going on in Russia. The speaker told of how he had been sentenced to be shot and how he finally made his escape across the Chinese border. He read a letter from his friends in Russia which said that they had plenty of everything except "bread." Miss Alice Thomas, who escaped massacre in Armenia some years ago, has promised to speak in Grace Presbyterian church in the near future. Services are as follows: Sunday school, 9:55 A. M.; Morning Service, 11 A. M.; Young People's meeting, 7 P. M.; Evening service, 7:45 P. M.; and Wednesday evening service at 7:45 P. M.

The main order of business taken up at the meeting was the election of officers for the new year, the successful candidates being: Commander, J. W. Allen; Senior Vice-Commander, R. F. Brulez; Junior Vice-Commander, M. V. Jensen; Quartermaster, A. C. Erwin; Chaplain, J. C. Lewis; Post Advocate, W. F. Dorn; Post Surgeon, W. G. The regular meeting of the San Mateo-Santa Clara Counties Council was held on Saturday night, October 14, in the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, San Mateo, with representatives from seven Posts being present. We were signally honored by visits from Mr. Kellogg, honorary member of Richmond Post, San Francisco, who addressed the meeting at length on vital subjects to every veteran, regardless of his affiliation. Mr. Amphlett, honoray member from San Mateo, was present for a few moments, but due to pressing engagements was unable to remain with us.

The regular monthly dance of the local Post, held the third Saturday of each month in Eagles Hall, will be held on October 21. These dances, under the direction of Comrade F. A. Collins, are affairs of prominence and assure all who attend them a wonderful evening of entertainment.

Old Glory Post has taken steps to have an appropriate representation in the N. R. A. parade to be held on November 7, and will be out in numbers, with teams, floats and drum corps. Everyone should support this movement, and the members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars realize that this is only a part of the obligation taken by each member when becoming a member of the organization, to support the government at all times. There is no class distinction, no special groups in the plans of the Veterans of Foriegn Wars. We aim to protect and assist the veteran, both the affiliated and the non-affiliated. We believe that the only way the cause of the veteran can be aided and abetted will be by unified action of all veteran organizations, working harmoniously and in accord with the principles of fair play and generosity and not to be too prone to judge the actions of our comrades and officials until such time as they have proven themselves unworthy of our support and confidence.

FRED R. LINSER, Adjutant.

There is in process of being chartered the Government's newest and most unprecedented agency, known as the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, says a Washington dispatch. The board of directors, comprising the Emergency Relief Administration, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior, will have available a fund of one billion dollars to preclude the possibility of any one starving in this country next winter.

It is a non-profit corporation whose chief function will be to buy such foodstuffs as beef, pork, milk and dairy products, flour, meal, rice and sugar, direct from producers, in cooperation with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, thereby removing surpluses from the commodity markets and stimulating prices to the farmers.

Distribution of food to undernourished children and eradication of malaria in several sections of the country were added to the program for helping the destitute. Concerned over the increasing malnutrition among children of the unemployed, Relief Administrator Hopkins has ordered local relief committees in the forty-eight states to provide for a meal a day at school buildings for hungry children, approximately six million throughout the country.

Processing taxes, such as are already in effect on cotton, wheat, and hogs, will be levied to pay the farmer. Packing houses and mills will process at cost the products going into relief channels. Products on which processing taxes cannot logically be levied will be bought outright. Manufacturers will be asked to produce goods without profit. It is estimated that $200,000,000 can be raised by a $2 processing tax on hogs, $100,00,000 on cattle, and other products in propostion.

The Corporation also will buy and distribute, all through the channels now used for relief, coal and clothing in its two-way program of caring for the needy while depleting surpluses.

HIGH SCHOOL P.T.A. FUNCTIONS WELL

The new and higher conception of the puproses of the Parent-Teachers' Association movement was again demonstrated at the monthly meeting of the Jefferson Union High School P. T. A. on last Tuesday evening in the Little Theatre of the new annex.

The program was furnished by the Physicial Education department with the purpose of interpreting to the parents the aims and objectives of physical education as a part of the high school curriculum.

This was the third of a series of demonstrations which are to form the program of the association for this school year.

At two previous meetings of the year the programs were given by the Vocational Guidance department and the History and Civics department.

Mrs. Bertha Songer, teacher of Girls Physical Education, presented the future values of the subject in a talk that was both interesting and instructive.

"Physical education," she said, "is essential to the high school student because of its effects upon her later life. Many youngsters do not know how to play. It is essential that they learn in order to make the most of their future opportunities. Because we encounter all grades of ability in our games, it is necessary that all learn the value of co-operation; learn to appreciate the value of effort and willingness even though fine players do not usually develop; learn to help the slower and less able. This seems to be one of the most important things physical education can teach.

"Cleanliness is another feature of our work which is stressed more than the game itself. We try to teach the child the value of a clean body. Her undesirability when offensive because of body odors is pointed out to her. Since the remedy is so close at hand, most youngsters soon avail themselves of it. By insisting on clean gym clothing at regular intervals, it is possible to bring home the necessity for clean clothes in other situations.

"With the girls, we also stress any matters which will aid in improving general apeparance, manners of conduct, and health.

"One might sum up the value of physical education by saying that it aims to make a young person more desirable and more fit as a member of society."

Mr. Albert Biggs, boys physical education instructor, presented the subject "Objectives in Physical Education of Boys." He said in part:

"Many individuals doubt that physical education merits a place on the school program of studies, for they feel that young boys and girls play sufficiently anyway, and also that the time allotted to physical education in the school program is too short to do much good. In answering these doubts the objectives of the physical education program can be brought out.

"Many boys and girls do not exercise as much as they should. Radios, picture shows, automobiles, all tend to keep them from obtaining the normal amount of physical exercise they should have. Physical education in the school helps to correct this situation.

"There are also a great many students who actually do not care to play or exercise. These students can often be changed in their attitude as the result of the P. E. program.

"The informal games in which the students participate also tend to teach the individual student to compete against his fellow students without a lot of squabbling or quarreling. He learns to play with a group—he learns co-operation.

"Finally, the most important lesson to be taught in physical education is the habit of cleanliness. A shower is required after a period of strnuous exercise, and hot water, towels, and soap are furnished for this purpose. As a result of this training received in physical education, the student acquires a habit of cleanliness which should carry over the rest of his life.

"In answer to the argument that the time allotted is too short to do any good, it might be said that twenty minutes of strenuous play followed by a shower-bath is all the exercise any individual needs at one particular time.

"If the student can be taught to enjoy exercise in the form of play in order to build up his body, if he can be made to play with groups of students without quarrels, and if he acquires the habit of cleanliness, then it can be said that the objectives of the physical education program have been met."

Under the direction of Miss Ester Torello a comedy in one act entitled "Latest in Football" was given by Edwin Davies, Doris Robertson, Mary Silicani, and Joe Farr, students in the English department. Each one of the performers took his part in a manner that would have done credit to more experienced actors.

The stage setting was ideal, and the lighting effects were beautiful.

The Glee Club, consisting of Eleanor Hutchings, Mary Jorgensen, Beatrice Hardy, Louise Rushing, Alice De Ram, and Vivian Minnena, rendered "The Merry Makers," and "The Dancers." Mrs. Songers was the accompanist.

The business meeting which preceded the program was presided over by Mrs. Franzen, the vice-president, in the absence of the president, Mrs. Truman Bentley.

In discussing plans for the raising of money for the District P. T. A. it was suggested that a musical tea be given. Others suggested that a voluntary offering by the members would involve none of the labor attached to the giving of a tea. It was finally decided in favor of the voluntary contribution.

After the program, refreshments were served by the hospitality committee, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Absolent. Mr. Bentley, president of the board of trustees, and Mr. McIsaac were the chief assistants.

Mr. James Ferguson, principal of the high school, announced that these monthly programs are being provided by the faculty and students of the high school, and involve a great deal of labor. "The purpose," he said, "is to give the parents first hand information concerning the work of the school, so that they may be better informed regarding the educational problems involved in the preparation of their children for their life work." He strongly urged that an effort be made to get all parents of the district to attend the Parent-Teachers' Association meetings, and thus take advantage of these programs.

Plague Killing Squirrels in Santa Cruz District

It is reported in Santa Cruz that hordes of gray squirrels, said to be the last of their species in this state are slowly dying of starvation amid rich feeding grounds. Fish and Game Commissioner Forrest J. McDermott blames a mysterious malady which attacks their eyes and blinds them so they are unable to hunt for food. Biologists of the University of California have been studying the plague for three years, but have been unable to determine the cause or type of the disease.

Handsome Adolph Hitler, the German dictator, advises his fellow countrymen about marriage, saying "choose a good, industrious, and pure girl, who is an adept housekeeper, with an affection for children." The line will please form on the right.

The Indian varsity annexed their second victory of the year last Saturday when they defeated Bellarmine Prep of San Jose 12-0, at the University of Santa Clara football field. Jefferson clicked well for the first time this year, fumbling only once, completing passes just right and all in all doing everything just as it should be done. Jefferson scored in the first quarter on a buck by Roy Beecher, after Jim Swan had recovered a fumbled Bellarmine punt on the Bellarmine 20 yard stripe. Beecher again tallied in the final quarter, when he intercepted a Bellarmine pass, and galloped sixty yards to a touchdown.

The combined Indian teams united Wednesday, October 11, to trounce the Balboa frosh-soph squad by a score of 31-0. The Indian second team played the major part of the game and scored all but one touchdown. The Indians' seconds looked good in scoring four touchdowns with little effort. The first string was in the game just long enough to score one touchdown, but they too looked impressive.

Once again the Indian squad meets South San Francisco in a return game to be held today on the home field. After defeating the Bellarmine Preps to the tune of 12-0 the Indians are out looking for more scalps and it looks bad for the South City Boilermakers. With less wind to buck against, the Indian pass-attack should work better and end runs should bring home the bacon. Due to injuries on the Jefferson squad tomorrow's game will be a benefit game and the admission will be 25c and 15c with student body cards. South City and Jefferson are bitter rivals and the game should promise much action.

There have been three additions to the student body with the return of the reforestation boys. Those who have returned are Grover Martin, Fred Wilkinson and Bill Keller. But we will soon lose one of them, as Fred Wilkinson will be out of school in a month.

On Wednesday evening, October 11, the students of the Public Speaking and Journalism classes attended tthe Alcazar theatre to see Charlotte Greenwood in "The Late Christopher Bean." The play has been selected as one of tthe ten best plays of 1932-33, and was enjoyed very much by all.

Those present were: Jean Benner, Marie Devevi, Gladys Oakley, Winona Hicks, Peggy Vincent Catherine McKeown, Ruth Smith, Albert Casetnini, Roland Hetrocchi, Mr. Saiz and his friend Mr. Stenhouse.

CHARLES A. RINGEN PASSES ON

Charles A. Ringen, of 16 Cavour street, passed away after a brief illness. Death was due to a cerebral hemorrhage. Ringen was a native of Germany, aged 67 years. He was a member of the Legion of Honor, the San Francisco Aerie of Eagles No. 5, and the Germania Club. He is survived by his daughters, Mrs. E. W. Nelson, of 2153 Twentieth avenue, San Francisco, Mrs. Florence Geiser, and a brother, W. Ringen. The funeral was conducted last Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock from the chapel of Gautner, Felder & Kenney. Interment was in Olivet Memorial Park.

Nearly 4,000 men, women and children are now deriving support from the direct labor in the construction of the San Francisco-Oakland bay bridge, according to Harrison S. Robinson, chairman of the financial advisory committee on the transbay bridge project.

Making microscopic motion pictures has been greatly simplified by an attachment developed for use with a Bell and Howell sixteen milimeter movie camera and an ordinary microscope.

New Airplane Service Planned for Mills Field

Two new airplane lines will operate at Mills Field, increasing daily arrivals and departures by 30 per cent following the signing of contracts with the San Francisco Public Utilities commission.

The two new lines are the Hargrove Air Lines and the Pacific Seaboard Airlines. The Hargrove service will operate a fleet of three Lockheed-Vega planes, with two round trips daily between San Francisco and Sacramento, effective at once. The Seaboard line, operating between San Francisco and Los Angeles along the coast route, will also open a service between Mills Field and Sacramento, with three round trips.

A crowd estimated at 40,000 persons visited the National Flower and Garden Show in St. Louis on opening day.

British Steamer Burning Off Yarmouth

FATS THAT WILL PROVIDE ENERGY

Butter Can Be Added to Most Any Dish.

By EDITH M. BARBER

IN NUTRITION articles we see little about the importance of fat in the diet. When we have plenty of money to spend for food most of us naturally get our full quota of fat, often without realizing that we are eating it.

The bureau of home economics at Washington states: "Fat gives staying power to food, and fat, together with starch and sugar, gives to food its energy value." The bureau calls attention now to the importance of fats in low-cost meals, to make them more appetizing and also to make them "stick to the ribs."

There is some fat, of course, in almost every kind of food, whether animal or vegetable. But all the vegetables and some cuts of meat taste better to most people if some fat is added, either in cooking or in serving, and that is where the so-called table fats come in—including butter, margarine and the salad oils.

Young onions, boiled and served on toast with melted butter, make an enjoyable supper dish. Hollandaise sauce, when both eggs and butter are cheap, is a special delicacy with fish, with greens and particularly with the stalked or head vegetables like collards, cabbage, cauliflowers, brussels sprouts or broccoli.

The pies "that mother used to make" undoubtedly had butter in the filling—all fruit pies and appie pies especially. Baked apple and brown betty, too, need the butter flavor to make them more inviting.

The use of so much butter may seem extravagant. However, two level tablespoonfuls, or about one ounce, will season five or six liberal servings of cabbage, carrots, snap beans, beets or peas, and will make parsley butter for six medium-sized boiled potatoes.

To the good cook the butter flavor is a desirable addition to almost any vegetable dish, and butter "just makes" many desserts. Buttered beans, buttered fresh peas, buttered cabbage, buttered beets, buttered carrots—these and other vegetables that are all good in themselves are far more attractive to most persons when served with melted butter.

Long heating destroys the butter flavor, and to cook vegetables with butter is wasteful; therefore the bureau advises adding the butter seasoning at the last minute before serving. Browned butter—the browning must be done carefully, however, lest the butter burn—gives a delicious flavor to cream sauce. Parsley butter—which is melted butter with chopped parsley in it—is a favorite dressing for boiled potatoes, and lemon butter, or melted butter with lemon juice, goes well with broiled fish.

Menu for One Day.

Breakfast.—Hot cereal, toast, coffee (adults), milk (children)

Dinner.—Broiled ground beef on toast, potatoes with parsley butter, tomato jelly salad (with sliced onion, shredded cabbage and french dressing), (tomato juice for youngest children), bread and butter, milk for children.

Supper.—Greens with bacon drippings, spoon bread, berries or bananas, milk for all.

Spoon Bread.

1 cup cornmeal
2 cups cold water
2 teaspoons salt
1 cup milk
2 or 3 eggs
2 tablespoons melted fat

Mix the meal, water and salt and boil for five minutes, stirring constantly. Add the milk, well beaten eggs and melted fat and mix well. Pour in a well-greased hot pan or baking dish and bake for forty-five to fifty minutes in a hot oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit). Serve from the pan in which baked.

Hollandaise Sauce.

4 egg yolks
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ cup butter
¼ teaspoon salt
Pepper
¼ cup boiling water

Divide the butter into three portions. Beat the egg yolks and lemon juice together, add one piece of butter and cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until the mixture begins to thicken. Remove from the stove, add a second piece of butter and stir rapidly. Then add the remaining butter, and continue to stir until the mixture is completely blended. Add the salt, pepper and boiling water. Return to the double boiler and stir until the sauce thickens.

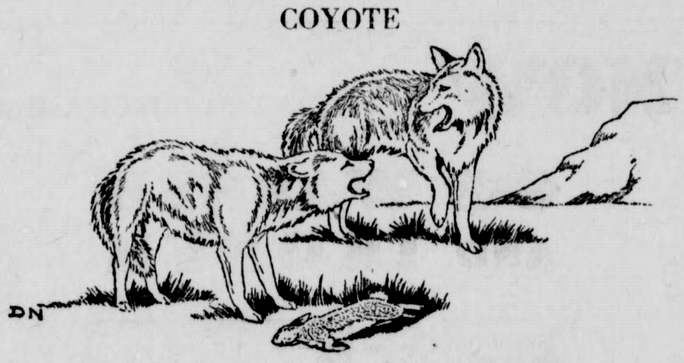
AMERICAN ANIMALS

COYOTE



THROUGH sagebrush, cactus and mesquite,
The coyote bounds on flying feet.
He chases rabbits in the rocks,
And preys upon the ranchers' flocks.

Although he seldom takes old rams,
He'll eat the little woolly lambs;
And this is such a wicked sin
That men set traps to catch him in.

But little prairie wolf is sly,
He knows as much as you or I.
So if they'd catch him in a snare,
They have to hide their traps with care!

All coyotes like to hunt at night.
They bark and howl and snarl and fight;
And two can fuss around a feast
And sound like five or six at least!

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Roy Mason was recalling the time, years and years ago, when, fresh from Yale, he was handling publicity for the great agricultural expedition organized by the late B. F. Yoakum, president of the Rock Island railroad. Finding that his road wasn't getting the business it should because farmers along the line could not haul their crops to the stations, Mr. Yoakum invited heads of various agricultural organizations to be his guests on a trip to Washington and through the East, the idea, of course, being to give a practical lesson in the building of good roads. Engineers were members of the party so that whenever a stop was made where good roads were being built, every step of the process could be explained. The expedition was a great success. Not only was the East busy building good roads but even the governors of several states acted as official greeters.

Members of the party were not allowed to spend a cent. They traveled in a private car and the best of everything was made available for them. They were duly impressed and quickly saw the advantage of good roads. So they went back to their homes and advocated and built good roads. The thousands of dollars spent on the expedition seemed a good investment as freight increased greatly. But with the good roads came the motor truck and thus, Mr. Yoakum, by his initiative, was assisting in creating opposition that has cost the railroads of the country millions and millions of dollars.

Amusing incidents in connection with the expedition were also recalled. There was the bearded gentleman from Texas. After a big dinner the delegation was taken to the Hippodrome. At that time, the great tank was in full operation and before their astonished eyes hundreds and hundreds of beautiful young women marched into the tank and disappeared under the water. The Lone Star representative was absolutely certain that the water wasn't real—so certain that he was willing to bet $5 that he wasn't afraid to jump in. The bet was taken. He mounted to the stage, leaped—and all but drowned. He couldn't swim a stroke!

To complete arrangements for the series, "The Incredible Barrymores," Sumner Newton Blossom, editor of the American Magazine, went out to Hollywood to confer with John Barrymore. In the course of numerous discussions, the talk turned from literature to an intimate and essential article of baby's wearing apparel. It seems that there are two methods of folding and adjusting the piece of linen, the actor holding that one was far better and the editor, who has had experience with white ducks since he was a lieutenant in the navy in the World war, advocating the other.

Finally, neither being able to clinch his argument, Barrymore suggested that they awaken the Barrymore baby and try out both methods. Blossom agreed and the infant was duly aroused. But, unfortunately, the baby didn't care to be used as clinical material and didn't hesitate to voice loud objections. That resulted in Mrs. Barrymore being awakened. She rescued the child and the knotty point, so far as the actor and editor are concerned, is not yet settled.

An attorney friend was telling me of an experience in his early days. He had obtained a judgment for $500 and went out to serve it. The debtor didn't seem to be disturbed at all. "How much is it?" he asked. The attorney told him. "Oh, that's all right," was the reply. "Just give me 65 cents so I can get home and you can add $200 to your judgment."

Discovered two things at a little party given by Jean and Lee Moser at their Eighty-fourth street home. The first was that right in mid-town New York there is a backyard with a little summer house admirably suited for consuming beer. The second was that advertising managers of three big Fifth avenue stores are women, and that all three came from Grand Rapids, Mich.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

To "Eat Crow"

THE expression to "eat crow" is practically synonymous with "to eat humble pie."

In both lines, the intent is, of course, metaphorical, since nobody actually eats either humble pie or crow, the latter dish particularly being especially unpalatable.

However, it was in the actual eating of crow we are told, that the phrase had its origin.

According to the story, the expression arose during the Civil war. A federal soldier, trespassing on the land of a Confederate, shot one of his tame crows.

The Southerner compelled the Northerner to eat the crow, only to suddenly find himself attacked and overpowered, and in turn forced to eat the remainder of the crow.

How I Broke Into The Movies

Copyright by Hal C. Herman

BY CORINNE GRIFFITH

MY CHOICE of a screen career was really more or less accidental. I didn't grow up with any idea of going into motion pictures, as so many other actresses have done. I always loved the theater, and always had a strong interest in the silent drama; but it was an impersonal sort of feeling. I never associated either of them with the thought of a career for myself.

Music was to have been by means of self-expression. While I was still attending school in New Orleans I had my heart set on a thorough musical education. I was to have studied in New York under the best teachers, and then take several years abroad. Whether I could have done anything with this art professionally I really don't know. I was not considering it from the point of view of earning a living at the time—merely as a sort of sublimated sideline.

But before any of these roseate dreams of travel and music in the capitals of the world could come true, my father suffered severe business reverses and the family resources collapsed. Suddenly, and without much warning, it was not only necessary to abandon my ideas but to go out and earn a living. Like many girls, I was without any particular training for battling the world. I had not progressed far enough with my music to make it provide for me, and I knew nothing else that seemed to offer a means of earning a livelihood.

I had relatives in California and went there. The West was certainly kind to me; for I had been on the coast only a short time when an incident, trivial in itself, blazed a way for me just when I most needed it. I was dancing one evening at a Santa Monica ballroom with some friends. I did not even know at the time that a brunette beauty contest was being held; but presently I heard my name called out. During the process of elimination I won the contest—much to my surprise and somewhat to my amusement! I had no idea that it would lead to anything. But among the judges was Rollin Sturgeon, then a director for Vitagraph; and he offered me a small part. Needless to say, I accepted.

I played one or two "bits" with Vitagraph and then appeared in two pictures with Earle Williams and one with Harry Morey. They cast me in wild "vamp" roles at first; which was excellent training, as I have since appreciated; for without previous stage experience it would have taken much longer to get over my stiffness and awkwardness before the camera, especially now that talking pictures are in vogue. But those "vamp" parts proved just the right thing to loosen me up and make me forget myself.

I remember in one of them I wore my first long train; with a mingled feeling of pride and worry. It looked very decorative, but also very dangerous, and I was in continual fear at first lest I trip on it and embellish some highly dramatic scene with an inglorious fall that most certainly would have changed the picture's tempo from drama to burlesque!

After very few of these roles I was fortunate enough to be sent east and starred in my own right. Fate was good to me, and the winning of that beauty contest undoubtedly saved me many heart-breaking months of discouragement in the extra lists.

Marilyn Her Model

Virginia Ruth Stephens, generally known as Gipsy, is eleven years old. An exceptionally clever dancer, she has been before the public since she was three, is two years ahead of her grade in school, and yet is popular with little girls who cannot speak a line. She has brown eyes and bronze hair, and her favorite wish is to grow up to do the things Marilyn Miller does, a combination of dancing and emotion.

Evalyn Knapp

Evalyn Knapp had a successful New York stage career before entering pictures in 1930. Some of her more recent productions include, "The Bargain," "Side Show," "A Successful Calamity" and "Big City Blues." She also had leading roles in Columbia's "This Sporting Age," "The Night Mayor," "Air Hostess" and "State Trooper."

A REVIVED INDUSTRY

It will be of interest to many to know something of the results which followed the legalization of 3.2 per cent beer by Congress on April 7. Official reports have been made public covering figures only to the end of August, but these show a consumption far in excess of what the brewers themselves expected, according to the secretary of their national association.

It was announced that between April 7 and August 31 the Federal beer tax revenue collected had reached $71,177,539, or approximately two-thirds of what government officials had estimated would be received in a year.

The first official figures respecting the revenue derived by the states, in addition to the Federal tax, showed that $5,803,209 had been collected by the twenty-two states which had legalized beer up to the end of June. These figures do not include the millions of dollars received by counties, cities and towns in local sales taxes and licenses from wholesale and retail distributors.

It is estimated that the revived brewing industry now employs about 30,000 workers directly, with a payroll of at least a million dollars a month. Many other thousands have been employed indirectly by factories supplying barrels, bottles, boxes and other supplies, while vast sums have gone to farmers for grain used in beer manufacture.

This revival of the brewing industry has no doubt caused a corresponding decrease in the consumption of bootleg liquor, which not only pays no taxes, but is highly detrimental to those who drink it.

GIVE MINING ITS CHANCE

After years spent in the deepest sort of doldrums, the metal mining industry of the West is beginning to feel the surge of life once more.

Prices for metals, in most instances, have shown substantial rises. Better yet, they have maintained the higher levels. Demand, long lethargic, is better.

This is a good time to point out to the people of the mining states that the future of the industry is going to be vitally affected by legislative policies. Even present high prices permit of little or no profits. Overly stringent regulatory laws, and especially heavy and oppressive taxes, can easily wipe out any gains.

The mines give bread and butter to hundreds of thousands. Treat them fairly.

BETTER FARM HOMES

Recently an editorial writer pointed out that farm people move to the cities and towns in order to enjoy the "comforts of life denied the rural citizen." While this is true to a certain extent, there are few of the comforts of life which might not be enjoyed by the rural population.

Many modern appliances for the home are available for the farm as well as the city, and in most cases at no greater cost. For it must be remembered that city folks do not have running water, labor-saving devices, radios, telephones and the like without paying for them.

One of the most important movements now under way with a view to greater farm comfort is that of rural electrification, which has already brought central station services to millions of farms. It is being rapidly extended in many states, through the co-operation of the electrical companies, agricultural colleges, and the farmers themselves. There is no reason why it may not be brought to a large majority of all farms, except those in the most remote sections, within a few years.

Compared with conditions which existed in the past, farm life of today is on a much higher plane, so far as conveniences and comforts are concerned. With the continued development of labor-saving machinery and devices for the elimination of household drudgery, improvement is bound to be even more rapid in the future.

A DESERVED HONOR

Few Americans ever heard of Dr. Charles Guillaume, a French scientist, recently awarded a special medal by the British Physical Society for the discovery of three important metal alloys. Yet one of these, called platinite, is said to save nearly $5,000,000 annually in the manufacture of electric light bulbs.

Another is elinvar, an improved alloy used in the manufacture of watch springs, while the third is invar, a nickel-steel product which is practically free from expansion or contraction by change in temperature, therefore of great value in the manufacture of metal surveyor's tapes, clock pendulums and other articles requiring stability of length.

Scientists like Dr. Guillaume are laboring constantly to adapt new forces and materials to the service of mankind, and the advance of civilization is due largely to their skill and patience. They are entitled to all the rewards and honors which may be bestowed upon them.

AUTO POWER BY RADIO

Another prediction which may sound fantastic was made some time ago, to the effect that we shall in a few years have automobiles that will run without fuel, the motive power being supplied from a central station by radio. The idea is advanced, not by a crank or a visionary, but by no less authority than G. M. Williams, president of the Marion Company, who declares that such a plan is receiving serious consideration by leading automotive engineers.

According to this plan, each car would have a certain receiving wave-length, and by throwing the switch a generator of corresponding wave-length in the central station would supply the power. Many cars might have the same wave-length, so long as the total load could be carried by the corresponding generator.

We do not vouch for the practicability of this suggestion, but only pass it on as an indication of what might happen. In any event, it illustrates the daring conceptions of the modern engineer. And who can say that the idea may not some day be made to work?

BANNING OF FIREARMS

Former Commissioner Whalen of New York wants legislation to prohibit the sale of firearms, on the theory that criminals would thereby be unable to get them. And this brings up an old question, in which there is room for argument on both sides, but we doubt that a no-gun law would help much.

The trouble is that the professional crook would find a way, through smuggling, bribery or other unlawful means, to get his gun anyway. Even if all firearms were required to be registered, it would take an army of inspectors to keep track of them, besides, every criminal would provide himself with a good-sized arsenal before the law could be put into effect.

Maybe the object sought by Mr. Whalen could be accomplished the other way round—by making it compulsory for everybody to carry a gun after sundown. Then the crooks would have less advantage.

TO SAVE NIAGARA FALLS

After several years of discussion a treaty was signed by Canada and the United States looking to the preservation of Niagara Falls, and a joint board recommended a $7,500,000 program for this purpose, after an investigation of conditions.

The rate of erosion was found by the board to be not so great as was feared, being very slight on the American side, and from three to four feet a year in the Horseshoe. Extensive protective works were recommended, however, in connection with which it is believed that considerable additional water may be diverted for power purposes without affecting the scenic beauty of the Falls.

Much anxiety has been felt concerning the possibility of a serious impairment of the grandeur of this great natural spectacle, therefore the action of the two governments in providing for its preservation will be approved by the people of both countries.

A MANLESS MAN-O'-WAR

Among the amazing developments of the last few years is that of the radio robot, or mechanical device controlled by radio, which has assumed many forms, from a talking and moving mechanical "man" to a radio-controlled battleship.

So far, the most remarkable production in this line is the radio controlled equipment installed on a British battleship, whereby its movements may be governed by transmitters carried by a destroyer two or three miles away. As described by Dr. E. E. Free, this radio control enables the distant destroyer commander to cause these functions to be performed aboard the battleship: Start and stop the engines, change the course, throw up a smoke screen, and even regulate the playing of the ship's phonograph band; all without a single man aboard the vessel.

Many experiments, more or less successful, have been made in America with radio controlled airplanes, tanks, automobiles and motorcycles, as well as radio directed naval ships during target practice.

It would suit most of us if in the next war it were possible to send out machines alone to do the fighting, while humans remained behind the lines attending to their other duties.

Bob Quillen reminds us that no 30-hour week has been arranged for the mother with twin babies.

War for the Enforcement of Motor Vehicle Laws

Telling it to the judge is not as easy as it used to be.

Indications that California justices and municipal judges are more than ever before inclined to a strict enforcement of motor vehicle laws were seen in statistics just released by the Department of Motor Vehicles.

They show that of the 72,000 persons brought into court during the first six months of 1933, all but 3,800 were convicted.

Alibis and excuses failed to win leniency and those convicted paid fines in excess of $398,000.

In addition, 1,621 were sent to jail for varying terms and seventy-six, charged with serious crimes, were held to answer by the superior courts.

A majority of the offenses involved either speeding or reckless driving.

Arrests for the first half of the year exceeded arrests of any previous like period by more than 5,000.

Fines collected went to the road funds of the various counties. Under the California law, courts are required to return abstracts of all cases to the headquarters of the California Highway Patrol.

"We are much gratified with the co-operation we are receiving from California courts in the punishment of motor vehicle law violators," said Director Theo J. Roche.

O. O. McIntyre, the New York columnist, tells this one about himself: "At the age of sixteen I underwent a throat operation at the hands of a German surgeon who went violently insane a few days later and butchered his wife."

Another statement we'll back up is: that if we do the repair work on your car that it won't be done like a schoolboy washes his ears—we'll make a thorough job of it; and when we start on your job we don't waste our time looking for a wrench and then try to find a nut to fit the wrench.

Now is the Time to Buy in Drive Against Depression

Swinging into line with the rest of America in the great "Now is the Time to Buy" movement, California has already developed a militant organization and is ready to go ahead with the drive just as rapidly as preliminary details can be worked out. In a recent statement, Jack L. Warner, chairman, N. R. A. State Recovery Board, made it clear that everything possible will be done by this group to speed up business in accordance with the plans outlined by the N. R. A. in Washington.

"This program is an attack on the depression from an entirely different angle than anything that has been done before," said Chairman Warner. "We are attacking the depression with the weapons of salesmanship. We all know that during the last three years or more there has been great lack of buying by individuals, family groups and business organizations. The present nation-wide campaign is simply a drive to get people to buy the things they would have been buying during the last three years or so if it had not been for their fear complex."

More than 30,000 were gathered at the new Sunnyvale base, where the great airship Macon, 121 tons of steel and fabric, was nosed down to her mooring mast last Sunday night.

CHECK SHOCK ABSORBERS

Shock absorbers should be inspected occasionlly if satisfactory service is expected, according to the Free Emergency Road Service of the California State Automobile Association. Sometimes they will work loose from the frame and make a peculiar noise. Wear on moving parts might also cause noisy operation. If leakage of fluid is observed they should be taken to a service station at once for proper attention.

BEST TIRES FRONT

In the event of a blow-out it is much easier to control the car if the blow-out is in the rear, according to the Free Emergency Road Service of the California State Automobile Association. Therefore, the best tires should always be placed on the front wheels. This is especially true with four-wheel brakes.

All night long the Lost People of the Isle mourned their priestess. The aliens' left them to their grief, but the wind brought their eerie cries and lamentations, and the firelight showed their dark forms as they danced slowly and solemnly about her bier. Some of the ceremonies were barbarous from Eric's viewpoint, part of the ancient ritual of shamanism, but he only shut his ears and looked the other way. The old men embalmed her body according to her priestly station—an Aleut rite of which Roy had heard, but which he thought had passed from the earth—and when the tide ran out, the hunters carried the bier to its place in the sea-caves.

When Eric had revived, he and Roy searched for the sacred document handed down from Fireheart's Russian ancestor, the founder of her dynasty. They found it in a seal-hide packet, written with some native ink on fine, home-made parchment. The ink had faded, the white skin darkened by time, but the script was still clear.

"Why can't Petroff translate it?" Eric asked, tensely.

"No reason in the world," Roy said. "Like most of these revolutionary coves, he's something of a scholar. Thank God he survived the melee—otherwise we'd be no better off than the Aleuts."

Eric found Petroff roaming the village row. His red passions had cooled, and he was glad to be of service to his conquerors and make peace at any terms. In the flickering light of Horton's turf-house, surrounded by tense, drawn faces, he translated quickly and easily the message from the past.

Yes, it was big medicine:

"June, 1795.

"For any of my countrymen and faith who come after me, my prayers.

"After many years of patient effort, I have learned the route across the shoals to Ignak island, now taboo. I have native children and I cannot go, but I record it for other castaways, lest it be utterly lost.

"It is shorter than the northern pass, through which I drifted. The time to go is in the early fall—the currents are less strong at this time of year, and the days clearer, although there is great danger of sudden storms.

"Paddle south for seven hours. You will see ahead a line of barrier reefs. Make to them boldly: five shiplengths away you will strike a strong current sweeping southwest. Do not fight against it, but paddle with it for three hours. Soon you will pass a great arch of rock. When you see the light full through its opening, turn south again and paddle for your life. A mile beyond will find you in the open sea, only four hours paddle to Ignak harbor.

"Be sure the shamans prophesy clear weather before you go. Start well before dawn, so that you will find the harbor while the light still lingers.

"It is a perilous journey, but by the blessing of our Lady of Kazan and Saint Michael and Saint George, you may win through.

"Adieu

"Paul Golikof."

Petroff's voice died away. In the long silence Nan saw old-time strength of purpose flow back into Eric's haggard face. But Roy was the first to speak.

"The old chap had more confidence in native weather prophets than I have. It would be sweet to get over there on the shoals and strike a fog."

Eric raised his eyes to Nan's. "We'll try it, anyhow."

"When?" It was half a whisper, half a gasp.

"Tomorrow night. There's usually a week of good weather after a boorga, and all the signs say so." He spoke with an echo of his old power. "We'll go in the two three-hatch kayaks—Petroff, Chechaquo, and myself in one—Bill, Big Smith, and Cooky in the other. There'll be nothing to fear from the men, except that they may desert. Big Smith will have to get back to find Little Smith, and I'll make terms with the other two."

"They may not be willing to go," Horton said.

"They'll go—if you promise to forget what's happened," Petroff said. "We've all been crazy, partly the island, mostly Sandomar and Garge, but we're sane now."

"With any luck, we'll be in civilization by next full moon." Eric's eyes closed wearily, and his blond head dropped on his breast. "Now let me sleep."

He flung down on the fur rugs. When he opened his eyes again, the sun of his last day on Forlorn island was high in the sky.

Preparations were made swiftly. These included food and water in the boats and money in Eric's pocket, concealed from his comrades. "I'm going to give you a check, too, for a substantial amount," Horton said in decisive tones. "It will do wonders toward getting a relief ship here, in the quickest possible time."

Eric decided to start before midnight, to meet the reefs as soon as possible after dawn. Every hour of clear weather was precious beyond all the checks in Horton's little book. So it came that the honeymoon did not shine yet for him and Nan, and only too likely—there were thick clouds below the southern horizon—it would never rise at all.

Nan did not return to the broken nest. She and Eric spent their farewell hour in her father's hut. Her friends had gone to the beach, but she was not alone with her lover. There were ghosts in every corner watching every move she made . . . shadows of the future . . . wraiths of fear. Her arms were bound.

Everything was changed. When Eric drew her close she kissed him gently, and shook her head to the pleading in his eyes. "It's too late," she whispered. "Everything must wait till we get back to earth. We're just waking up from a long dream." She smiled wistfully. "You won't blame me, Eric. . . ."

"Your happiness comes first. Mine would be a poor love, not to concede that." He stood back and adored her, the lovely rounded contours of her dark head, her dusky hair flowing, her pointed hazel eyes lustrous in their long black lashes. "I only wish I had taken you when I had the chance."

"Perhaps I'll wish so too—when you are gone." She spoke in low, somber tones. "If you're lost out there on the shoals and I never see you again, I'll always hate myself, for a fool and a coward."

"It hasn't been cowardice. That much is sure. You're the bravest girl I've ever known, and you just couldn't bear to surrender to Forlorn island, and so to me." He kissed her eyes, forehead, lips. "I'm coming back to you, Nan. I haven't gone through so much just to drown in the shoals; that would be too mean an end to all this. But if fate did play such a trick, I'd want you to have no regrets. You've followed your own star, and kept faith. And you've justified my life."

It seemed only a moment later that they were clinging together in farewell.

The parting at the beach was one of the high moments of the whole adventure. Weeping openly, Mother Horton clasped Eric in her lean arms; and her son's voice was hoarse as he said goodby. Roy wrung his hand and clapped him affectionately on the back; Marie kissed him with Gallic fire. Even the Aleuts were moved. He had finally won their full, savage devotion; they crowded around him, grunting, and presenting little tokens, colored shells and ivory figures, to bring him good luck. The five survivors of Sandomar's crew kept to themselves, but they shared in the hand-shaking at the last.

With a tortured breast, Nan saw Eric board his little ship. It seemed heartbreaking to have him depart at night, in the cheerless gleam of the moon, with naught to guide him through the dark wastes but a pocket compass and the far cold glimmer of the stars. Yet his purpose held. Already he was dipping his blade. Before she found breath to plead with him, at least to call him back for a last kiss, his form was dimming in the shadows. Soon, so soon, there was nothing left but the wan glimmer of the paddles in the moonlight, and this too faded away.

"Goodby, goodby," her friends were shouting into the dark. "Good luck! Come back safe!"

Then naught was left but the night, the lapping combers, the spectral moon, and she and her friends forsaken on the strand.

* * * * * * *

Eric kept his course. The breeze was favorable and the waves moderate. It was as though his old mother, convinced at last of his worth, had turned gentle. An unknown star in the southern sky guided him true.

Hour after hour the paddles dipped, while the moon sailed stately overhead. The two boats kept pace. The only sound was the moaning voices of the sea, an occasional water-bird starting up with a cry, and, at long intervals, a few quiet words between the paddlers. The stars began to pale; Eric had to trust more and more to the small compass fastened on the walrus-hide deck before him. At last the dark eyelid of the sky rolled back, and her blue iris glimmered through.

Just before sunrise, precisely seven hours after they had embarked, they heard breakers roaring ahead. So Paul Golikof had written—and the voyagers' hearts were cheered. But it was not easy to beat on toward the tide-rips and undertows of the shoals. If they went too far, the reefs would make short shift of their flimsy shells.

But Golikof's directions bore out again. When they were two hundred yards from the rocks—five shiplengths of Golikof's time—the paddlers began to feel a strong drift to the southwest. It was like a river running in the ocean. Eric's reckoning as a navigator had often been put to naught by the mysterious currents around the Aleutian islands, unexplained save by the meeting of the warm north Pacific with icy Bering sea, but he had never met so distinct a stream as this. Padding boldly, he ran before it.

Fully nine miles an hour they swept along the shoals. Soon the stream widened and lost power, but even when the tide turned, it continued to bear them to the southwest. And now Chechaquo grunted, and pointed with his hand.

South by southwest they raised a pale blue shadow on the sky line. It was not fog, not a wisp of cloud, not a trick of the eyes, but surely landfall—the furthest outpost of Nan's lost world.

"Ignak island!" Chechaquo muttered, deep in his throat.

Eric did not look at him, but he knew that his eyes glowed like black pearls. . . . Home, and all that it meant to his child's heart. Sweet food and strong drink from the trading store. The greeting of his hunting mates. His return to his old place by the cooking-fires. . . . And he did not dream that the strong young hunters would now be patriarchs squatting in the dark corners of the turf-huts—that his firm-fleshed round-armed squaw had wasted to a stooped and withered crone—that his own children would not even remember his name.

The boats sped on. Eric began to watch for a natural arch of stone. Presently he picked it up, a great dome looming among shoals, with the sea running in its hollow, he turned south straight across the current. And just as Golikof had bade them, he and his mates paddled for their lives.

It was an experience to raise even Chechaquo's coarse, straight hair. The breakers roared, the reefs rushed to attack, fangs bared and snarling, only to swerve aside and sweep impotently behind; rocking, pitching, bounding up like sword-fish, the boats sped far down the current toward the fatal shoals below the pass. But when the paddlers' breath was spent and their loins ached, they saw the open sea rolling beyond.

Eric cheered them on with a shout. Their blades hacked and gleamed; boldly they charged the last rank of the enemy, a long line of wild, white horses with flowing manes. The wicked chop of the seas began to change to a long, gentle swell. Davy Jones' shoal roared in thwarted rage behind them.

Nothing but a sudden gale could stop them now—and no cloud was in sight. They ate their dried meat, passing it from hand to hand, drank from the water casks, and paddled wearily on. The bluffs of Ignak island began to take form.

And now Eric divined that the great adventure of his life would soon pass. Fate is a master playwright and she would provide a quick curtain for this drama of the North. As Ignak harbor opened before him, he saw what looked like three little black sticks standing in the blue.

The trading ship was in.

CHAPTER XIV

The skipper of the Chelsea, little auxiliary schooner out from Seattle to trade with the Aleutian and Kuril islands, gave no greeting as the two kayaks paddled alongside, but his eyes opened. Like most sailors, his extra senses were keenly developed, and even now he knew that here was a tale to tell on lonely decks for the remainder of his life. White faces were not common in these waters. The kayaks were of a primitive type he had never seen before—and they came from the direction of Davy Jones' shoal.

When the boats were fast, Eric came up the ladder to the deck. "I'm Ericssen, first officer of the Intrepid."

"Of de—w'at?" Captain Nelson demanded.

"The Intrepid," Eric repeated patiently. "She was lost early in the summer."

Nelson stared hard. This was bigger news than he had imagined. "I hear about her. She was suppose to go down wit' all hands. De papers been full of her."

"Captain Waymire and nearly half the crew went down. The survivors are marooned on an island in Davy Jones' shoal." Eric drew a deep breath. "I want to arrange for you to go in and get them."

"But—but—" the old Dane stammered and stuttered——"dare's no way to get into Davy Jones' shoal!"

"We've been there—with the Intrepid. She draws more water than you. The pass from the north is safe unless you hit a gale. Of course if you don't want to try it I'll wireless for a coast guard cutter, but the passengers are in a hurry, and you can name your own figure."

Nelson came of a thrifty race. Moreover, it was his life to poke the Chelsea's nose into uncharted waters and unknown harbors, where the big tramps dared not venture. He suggested that Eric come to his cabin. There, over two glasses, they talked tersely and to the point.

Twain's Praise of Work

Work is the darlingest recreation in the world and whomsoever nature has fitted to love it is armed against care and sorrow.—Mark Twain (in private letter).

THE ARRAN ISLANDS

Arran Boys in Red Petticoats.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

WHILE many business men of America and Europe talk of ushering in a new era to end economic ills, the inhabitants of the Arrans, three small islands off Ireland's west coast, go their way, apparently untouched by the world's troubles.

Simplicity, harmony, and a feeling of remoteness are all close to the root of the charm which the Arrans have for the occasional visitor. The islands seem not of this age, for the workaday world lies beyond the horizon of time as well as that of space.

The beauty of the setting and of the human picture are equally unconscious.

There is a unity in the theatrical panorama of sea and sky, the medieval homeliness of speech and hearth and tool, the honest weave as well as the madder and indigo dye of textiles, the seraphic countenance of every fourth or fifth woman you meet on the undulating roads.

In the bare sanctuary of these islands the soul of ancient Ireland now has its ephemeral resting place. Language and habiliments, customs, traditions, flesh and blood, from the days of St. Patrick and before, forced westward through Connaught during seething ages, have concentrated at the Arrans.

Although the largest island of the group is less than nine miles long, the three together have, at a guess, as much stone wall as all New England. Inishman, the middle island, boasts 2,500 miles of walls. Inisheer is not far behind, while Inishmore may have several times as much. No figures are authentic, but if a state ordnance officer were to tell you there are 10,000 miles of walls upon the three islands, you would admire his conservatism.

Huge Duns on the Hill.

Picking up blocks of limestone and disposing of them in the only way possible must always have been the chief occupation of the inhabitants. The prehistoric people indulged themselves by rearing on the hilltops massive, buttressed, Cyclopean forts, such as Dun Aengus and six others, ringed about with many concentric breastworks and chevaux-de-frise of stone.

These duns are among the most magnificent barbaric monuments that survive in Europe. Fortunately, the later islanders were under no temptation to pull them down; rather, they were forced to emulate the example of the first builders, and to continue the unmortared masonry on a less heroic scale down the long slopes to the very crests of the beaches. Only thus might they hope to uncover a crannied pasturage and the patches of soil in which rye, potatoes, cabbage, and willow withes may grow.

From the rims of the duns, as also from the sea, the Arrans present the pattern of a crazy quilt. Breast-high walls, mostly a single layer of blocks in thickness, show no standard of arrangement or direction. The thousands of irregular inclosures that come under a glance have neither gates not stiles. The method of turning a cow into pasture, and of releasing her at evening, is to take down a section of the boundary and then to build it up again behind you. A cross-country ramble, even for the nimble, becomes a process of demolition and stone-laying.

The present population of the Arrans is less than two thousand. Losses through emigration to the United States have been heavy and are still going on as fast as passage money can be sent from this side of the ocean. There are doubtless many more of the islanders in the vicinity of Boston than remain at home.

Everybody, at any rate, has relatives in America, and the only importunities one encounters are those of lonely mothers and fathers begging snapshot portraits to be sent to the far-off children. Not a few of the expatriates return, with or without their fortunes; for the grip of the spray-washed rocks seems stronger, if possible, than that of the fairest glens in Erin. If only one could make a living at home!

While there are many family names among the people of the islands, the bulk of the population appears to be made up of four tribes—the Mullins, the Gills, the Flahertys, and the Connollys.

Four Main Tribes.

All of these names except Gill are spelled in more than one way, but are acknowledged to refer to the same stocks. Confusion that might result from the duplication of first names is commonly avoided by the addition of the father's given name. Thus Patrick Flaherty John or James Mullin William become sufficiently distinctive. These are here cited in English form, but Irish is, of course, the universal speech among the islanders, and there are many of all ages who have little or no English.

The Arran people are, on the whole, a fine looking lot, variable in stature and complexion, but showing a strongly marked Norse component. Furthermore, their generally deliberate conversation is after the manner of the comic-story Norseman rather than of the proverbially quick Celt, although much of this may be due to the fact that they address a stranger in their second and less familiar language.

The clothing worn by the older inhabitants of Inishmore, and by practically the entire population of the less urbane islands of Inishman and Inisheer, is the time-honored garb of cloudy blue homespun, with ankle-length trousers for the men, and a white-sleeved coat over the blouse. A hat of heavy felt completes the native costume, but many of the younger men have taken to caps or tam-o'-shanters, as well as to the blue jersey of the fisherman.

The women wear long, red, homespun petticoats, indigo stockings, and red or parti-colored shawls. Taste and utility are combined in the woven woolen girdles, of bright hues, bound several times around the waists of men and boys or sewn as a decoration on the skirts of the women.

Except in the sophisticated parts of Inishmore, within a few miles of Kilronan, the dress of small boys includes a red petticoat in lieu of breeches. At Inishman one sees nothing else. Formerly the boys wore these until they were twenty or so, but now one sees none on youngsters of more than fifteen years.

The boys' skirt is, no doubt, a phase of the Gaelic kilt, surviving in shorter and more familiar form in the Scottish Highlands, but at the Arrans it seems to have become necessary to justify it by a spurious explanation. Probably as a result of innumerable inquiries by visitors, the following story is now passed out as a matter of course:

The fairies or the commonplace devil have the power to lure small boys out of the everyday world, but their influence over little girls is much less. Therefore the boys are rigged out like girls and the evil ones are likely to be deceived, although there is no absolute assurance of safety.

What the Houses Are Like.

The dwellings on all three Arrans are of the usual Irish peasant type, built of cemented stone, whitewashed within and without, and roofed with thatch, flagstones, or slate shingles. Nine out of ten are thatched, and in this land of ocean gusts the straw is laced down with a network of cordage, the vertical strands of which are knotted to a line of pegs under the eaves. The pegs themselves are of limestone, forming units of the wall; for wood, even in small pieces, is at a premium.

The houses may have two, three, or even more rooms. At any rate, there will be the kitchen (the living room of the family) and a bedroom opening from it.

Above half of the kitchen is the inevitable turf loft, where sufficient peat is stored so that dry fuel is always at hand. The appurtenances of the kitchen include a pot-oven among the fireplace gear, and an open cupboard in which are ranged the treasured Canton plates, the trenchers, luster-jugs, and other ware passed along from one generation to the next.

The cupboard, like the beds, is likely to be painted in a pattern of bright colors.

BEAUTY TALKS

By MARJORIE DUNCAN

TO MAKE SPINE FLEXIBLE

A STIFF spine brings with it a multitude of evils. It hampers the functioning of the vital organs. It robs the step of its spring. It makes people look prematurely old.

Here are a few simple hints to help you limber up—make your spine more flexible, your body more supple and graceful. Don't go about it too strenuously. Take it easy at first. If you are physically able, and have the time, by all means go in for some sport suited to your age and general condition. But you can do all that is necessary, in the privacy of your home.

Here is an effective spine limberer: When you are wearing no restricting clothing, stand with your feet a few inches apart, soles flat on the floor. Imagine your soles positively glued to the floor. Leave all the rest of the body limp, ready to sway this way and that on the supporting soles. Lean over, letting the head and arms hang limp, fingers touching the floor as nearly as possible. Try to undulate the spine, try to wiggle it in waves so there will not be a single vertebra which has not felt the motion. Sway the limp body in every direction. Then stand erect and sway the body forward, backward, and to each side. Wriggle shoulders, loosely, up and down. If you find the exercise monotonous, turn on the radio and do it to music. It is more enjoyable then.

If your spine curves in too much at the waist line, try to limber that particular section. It is a condition called lordosis and is the result of tense, drawn nerves. Constant wearing of high-heeled shoes will cause it. The tensed nerves pull the spine in and this automatically pushes the abdomen forward in an ugly curve. Another ugly curve is formed across the back below the waistline. In the case of the too fat woman, the fat and the ugly curve combined produce a bustle effect that is ludicrous. These ugly lines may be corrected by the spine limbering exercises. The fat woman should wear medium heels or her daily walk will conteract the good effect of her daily spine exercise.

When sitting, make sure that you sit well back in the chair, thighs filling the seat of the chair, back erect but not entirely straight and not rigid, feet flat on the floor, shoulders back, not tensed upward, head up and back, chin horizontal. Pull up—grow tall. Hold your head as though you were proud of something, and well you may be if your posture is correct and graceful.

When standing, remember head up, chest up, shoulders back, not up, head held high, toes pointing straight ahead, hands and arms relaxed at the sides.

AN AGE OF BEAUTY

IT'S an age of youth we're living in. And beauty is measured first in terms of good grooming and second in youthfulness. Because firm flesh is the rightful heritage of the "young uns"—it is also becoming to all ages. A firm, flowing, graceful line—that's youth and beauty—both. Few oldsters can boast it. Women especially. A shaking, wriggling little bulge here and there that boldly "tells the world"—"here I am to spoil youth's firmness" is no longer tolerated. Not by Miss Twenty. Not by Mrs. Sixty. Not by a far shot.

Corsets have made a come-back. But they aren't grandmother's kind. Nor mother's variety. If these were in vogue "before your time" you have only to look at the family album to see the effect. Steels—many of them—stiff-laces—they strait-jacketed the figure into something that looked more like an hour glass and less like a human, feminine figure.

Compare those bulky, heavy nuisances with the corsets of our day. Fashion is wise—and the corset manufacturers wiser. Witness the wonders they do with a bit of soft, porous, material. A reinforcement here, a clever cut there, a piece of elastic and you have a foundation garment. Light in weight, not at all cumbersome, no interference with breathing nor the proper functioning of the entire system. And the way these little scanties mold the figure is nothing short of magic. They disguise the flabby bulges, they give the figure a shapely, flowing line that speaks of youthful firmness. Best of all, they are priced so that every woman's purse can afford one.

I'm all for these little girdles, scanties and such—the new, light, clever kind. Not that I advocate covering bulges. Far be that from me. Those of you who have followed this column closely know that I am a stickler for exercise. More power to the young girl and young woman whose figure naturally is firm, bump-less and graceful. By all means exercise yourself back to youthful firmness. And while you are doing it—call in an ally in the form of the new little corsets.

Correct sitting posture is as important to health and beauty as correct standing posture. And poor sitting posture can cause constipation, indigestion, biliousness, nausea, headaches, poor appetite, sluggish liver and dozens of similar evils. Stand and sit erect and the muscles of the abdomen are in their proper positions and the digestive organs—stomach, liver, intestines—are receiving their requisite blood supply. Slouch and this circulation is impaired.

CLOSED CLAIMING IS TANFORAN RULE

Closed claiming will be the rule at Tanforan at the fall meeting to begin on Wednesday, November 1, for a period of forty days. The "closed" regulation, which permits only persons having horses in a race to make claims, has been found to best fit into modern conditions and is being adopted by many tracks in the East.

It has been pointed out in the pro and con discussion that has been going on all summer between the proponents of open claiming on the one hand, and closed claiming on the other, that with closed claiming in force, horsemen are not able to arrive at a track with a bank roll and a halter and depart with a halter and a horse.

At the meeting at Washington Park. which came to a close on Saturday, the stewards, at the request of horsemen, changed the rule from "open" to closed claiming after the period of racing was only one third completed.

Friends of Harry Comstock are watching his plans for racing at Arcadia with much interest. It is recalled that Comstock and Lawrence, under which name Harry and the late Del Lawrence conducted the Oakwood Stock Farm, up in the Sierra Nevada country, bred some good horses at their nursery. The gallopers were raced at Arcadia, Emeryville and other tracks. The firm also had a concession from the late E. J. Baldwin at Arcadia.

The stock horse Runster, which stands at the farm of Alma Spreckels Rosekrans at Woodside, in San Mateo county, is from the mare Salvatrix, a daughter of the Comstock and Lawrence stallion Salvation.

Harry Comstock never gave up his connection with the racing game altogether, although he has devoted much time in recent years to owning and managing hotels. He has been a frequent visitor at the tracks when features were being decided.

Industrial Rise Broadens as N. R. A. Gets Firm Hold

Broadening of industrial operations is more in evidence as adjustments to code conditions are being completed, according to Dunn & Bradstreet's latest report. Further substantial gains in factory employment and shift from part-time to full-time routines are reported.

Lumber mills have greatly increased output. Volume of carpet and rug mills is far above last year. Cotton mill production is nearly up to the August record. Mills are having difficulty supplying demand for fine-yarn standard cotton cloths. In the wide gray-goods division, current orders will permit operations for several months ahead. Textiles generally are double the prices of last April. Many mills are sold up on print cloths to the end of the year. Mills making men's wear, woolens and worsteds are unwilling either to promise deliveries or quote prices.

HOUSE PLANTS FLOURISH UNDER ELECTRIC LIGHTS

The old theory that house plants must be kept close to windows if they are to thrive has been put to rout by experiments conducted by the General Electric engineers in Cleveland. Exhaustive tests proved that plants flourish under electric lights. And what's more, they can be brought to bloom considerably earlier under artificial light than in daylight alone.

Howard College, in Birmingham, will offer a new course in thinking. Probably to train recruits for the brain trust.

An electrically operated hair cutter has been invented and patented by a Los Angeles man, Frank Fewins.

Road Building Now in Progress in 42 States

Eight of the fourteen states which delayed inauguration of road construction programs have just qualified for their pro rata participation in the fund of $400,000,000 Federal road fund, leaving only six which have not yet complied, including Maryland, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Georgia, New Jersey and Indiana, according to a Washington dispatch. The general counsel of the Public Works Administration is not yet prepared to render an opinion as to whether the funds which were allocated to the six states, conditional upon their doing their part, can be withdrawn. Active road construction is now in progress in all of the remaining forty-two states.

HOME PLANNED TO GIVE HOUSEWIVES N. R. A. HOURS

A model home designed and equipped to give housewives about the same working hours as those provided in the blanket code of the N. R. A. is being built by the Westinghouse Eelectric and Manufacturing Company. It will be a simple and efficient house which can be sold to those in modest circumstances.

It goes without saying that this home will be completely fitted out with electric devices to save time and labor—range, refrigerator, dishwasher, washing machine, ironer, vacuum cleaner, floor polisher, and all the smaller appliances. The plans also call for air conditioning, automatic heating, and other provisions for comfort and efficiency.

The dove of peace still hovers over Europe, having found no safe place in which to light.

It is sad but true that marriage ends many a beautiful romantic love affair.

If you bought GAS HEAT as you buy GROCERIES

YOU LOOK for the grocer's bargains. That's wise buying. It saves you money, or permits you to set a better table within your budget.

Natural Gas is a bargain buy. Let's imagine it's being sold in cans on the grocer's counter.

In the old days of manufactured gas, you bought the small can containing 550 units of heat. Now for the same price you get the large can, containing 1150 units of heat.

That's more than twice as much heat, twice as much for your money. You'd appreciate that bargain if you took your gas home in a market basket. But gas is not sold that way. It is delivered to you in your home, at the very spot you want it, silently, efficiently, with no bother to you. And you don't pay for it until after you have used it.

Every home today can afford the comfort, convenience and cleanliness of the gas range; of automatic hot water; of house heating—all made possible by this bargain offering of Natural Gas, the naturally better fuel.

DOZEN INJURED IN HIGHWAY MISHAPS

More than a dozen persons are suffering from injuries received in San Mateo county week end traffic accidents, five of which occurred on the Bayshore highway.

Four men were treated at the South San Francisco hospital after a truck driven by Manuel Vierra, of San Lorenza, and the car of Joseph Bella, of Brisbane, collided on the Bayshore highway in the north end of the county. Vierra was badly cut, and his brother, Alexander Vierra, of Hayward, was cut and suffered a fractured collar bone.

In another mishap on the Bayshore highway near the San Francisco county line, four were injured when a car driven by Otto Peterson ran off the road and overturned. Charles Barrett, Eric Guleston, Harry Setterburg and Carl Rasmussen suffered injuries as a result of the accident.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold S. Moore, of San Francisco, were cut and bruised when their car ran off the Bayshore highway in the north part of the county, struck the parked car of J. W. Sefrid, of San Bruno, and then ran into a trailer.

Mrs. J. Haulman and her daughter Doris were cut and bruised in another collision on the Bayshore near Mills Field.

C. Curry, of San Francisco, was badly cut when his motorcycle went into a fence on the Skyline boulevard west of Belmont.

George Welch, of San Francisco, was bruised when his car ran off the Skyline boulevard near the Half Moon Bay road after running into a deer that was crossing the road. While Welch was getting his car back on the road, a motorist stopped, picked up the deer and left, according to Welch.

Mr. and Mrs. Vern L. Whitson were treated for cuts and bruises at the Palo Alto hospital after their car and one operated by Albert K. Wallace, of San Jose, collided on the Bayshore highway in the south end of the county.

National Recovery Plan Reduces Non-Employment

Statictics compiled by Federal and State labor departments, confirmed by national private agencies, including the American Federation of Labor, showed that the great army of unemployed numbered 14,000,000 last March. The consensus of estimates made by such sources up to mid-September was that about one-fourth of that vaste horde of disconsolate individuals had been restored to gainful employment through the operation of the National Recovery Act, says a Washington dispatch.

On October 9 about 3,000,000 employers of two or more persons throughout the country received a questionnaire from President Roosevelt with a message which read: "Two months ago I invited you to enter into an agreement with me to aid industrial recovery by shortening hours and increasing wage rates. The time has come to take stock. The information here requested is necessary to determine the progress we have made."

Employers were asked for comparative figures on employment and payroll totals for the two pay periods ending July 15, 1933, and October 14, 1933. These results, to be available only to sworn employees of the Census Bureau and treated as strictly confidential, will disclose the actual situation. The extent to which additional efforts must be put forth and prepaartions for feeding and clothing and housing these unfortunates not yet absorbed into industry will then be known, and Americans must act accordingly. Despite depleted local treasuries, this terrible task confronts us and is utterly unavoidable.

Fortunately the load will be lightened to the extent that our people enter into the second phase of the vitally essential public co-operation for which the President appealed and without which he assured us recovery is impossible. Now the duty is no longer that of employers. It is apparent that, with few exceptions, they are complying with the President's Reemployment Agreement. By this time the significance of the Blue Eagle is well understood. Under that symbol of recovery prices are sure to to advance. Of that natural consequence of increased pay-rolls in every industry, the President warned us when he signed the Recovery Act on June 16. To serve our own purpose, it is imperatively necessary that we now lay in our winter's supplies.

Consider New Plumbing Law

The new county plumbing ordinance affecting the unincorporated area, was given first reading last Monday by the San Mateo county board of supervisors and continued one week. It provides for the issuance of certificates of registration, licensing of plumbers, and regulates construction and repair of all plumbing gas fixtures and sewer connections pertaining to dwellings and other buildings.

Now poor little Sally Rand has been sentenced to jail because she couldn't hold three fans at once.

Navy Day Celebration at Vallejo on October 27

If the Mare Island Navy Yard is not in shiphape condition for Navy Day, on October 27, it will not be for lack of preparation, for it has been "fine-combed" in recent weeks by officials of the Navy and government as well as other parties. Last Friday, Mare Island was subjected to a thorough inspection by a committee of Congressmen, who have been on an extensive tour of naval bases and the fleet.

Taken to Vallejo from the transport Henderson in San Francisco on a destroyer, the Congressmen were accorded a salute of seventeen guns in their honor on arrival. After a comprehensive tour of the yard, they were guests at luncheon and later returned to San Francisco on the destroyer.

Among the fourteen Congressional members of the group were Representatives Florence P. Kahn, Frank Buck, J. J. McGrath and R. R. Eltse, of California. Several were accompanied by their families, and a group of Naval and Marine officers completed the entourage.

Prior to Navy Day, Mare Island will receive a visit from Secretary of the Navy Swanson, now en route from Hawaii on the cruiser S. S. S. Indianapolis, while recently Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry Latrobe Roosevelt made an exhaustive survey. An official inspection was also conducted by Admiral David F. Sellers, Commander-in-Chief of the U. S. Fleet.

Wednesday 1,500 delegates to the state U. P. E C. convention visited the Yard, while later in the month the Rockridge Women's Club of Oakland, and the California Scholarship Federation will be guests.

These visitors, however, are but a small fraction of the number of citizens who are expected to spend October 7 at Mare Island, when the Navy holds its annual "open house" to the public on the twelfth observance of Navy Day. Last year over 10,000 persons of Northern California became acquainted with the peacetime function of the service on the occasion.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

G. W. Mason, president of the Kelvinator Corporation, says:

"Much of the phenomenal success Kelvinator Corporation has enjoyed this year is credited by our organization to our aggressive campaign in the newspapers of the country. We feel that nespapers are an exceptionally strong medium for getting a message quickly and forcefully to the attention of the public.

"In fact, Kelvinator's first upward swing in sales this year, which later led to a volume never exceeded in the company's nineteen years of existence, followed less than a month after an intensive newspaper campaign was adopted to tell the story of Kelvinator's temporary low price schedule, which has been put into effect to allow our customers the benefits of exceptionally low costs then prevailing in the raw materials field.

Kelvinator at present is waging the strongest fall sales campaign in the company's history, in the conviction that business conditions at present offer remarkable opportunities to advertisers who take their stories to the public. Because of our belief in the efficacy of newspapers, we have given an important place in this campaign to newspaper advertising, and I am pleased to say that the unusual success this campaign is already bringing is another tribute to newspapers as an advertising medium."

NATURAL GAS PROVES AN INEXPENSIVE FUEL

Householders who use natural gas for all domestic purposes, including cooking, house-heating and water-heating, pay only one-half the amount paid in former years for similar service supplied by manufactured gas.

Evidence in support of this statement was presented by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company at a recent hearing upon rates before the California Railroad Commission. The company submitted a comparison of gas bills and quantities of gas consumed by a selected group of 131 customers for domestic gas service. The bills covered a full year before the introduction of natural gas and the first two comparable years following its substitution for the artificial product. The selected group included all types of consumers and was representative, in every way, of this classification of the company's business.

It was found that for the year ending July 31, 1929, the last year of manufactured gas, these consumers paid an average bill of $139.50, while for the first year of natural gas service the average bill per consumer was only $100, while the consumer used 13.1 per cent more gas heat. For the second year the average bill was $114.30, with 33.5 per cent more heat consumed. Based upon an equalization of heat units consumed, the saving per customer was found to average 55.5 per cent. The explanation is found in the fact that natural gas, having more than double the heating content of manufactured gas, is proportionately cheaper to use.

The housewife who is contemplating the installation of a heating system for her domestic comfort during the approaching winter will do well to study these figures. November is the time to act. There are numerous house-heating appliances on the market, each of them efficient in its particular way. They range from central furnaces to floor furnaces and portable heaters. The Pacific Gas and Electric Company does not of itself sell appliances, but it employs experts whose business it is to advise the prospective customer concerning the proper equipment to suit the particular heating problem presented. These experts are always at the call of the householder, and no charge is made for their advice.

All Under 16 Ordered Back to Their Studies

Recent advices from Washington announce that the local school board, acting in strict accordance with the N. R. A. code, is ordering back to their studies all children under 16 years who hold jobs under work permits, and also has ordered the recall of "vacation permits" in every case where children are required to work more than three hours per day, between the hours of 7 A. M. and 7 P. M., so as not to interfere with their school work, as stipulated in President Roosevelt's Reemployment Agreement. The action was taken following notice from the United States Labor Department for a report which showed that 480 such permits were issued for the school year ending June 30. All work permits are being reviewed and employers closely interrogated as promptly as possible.

The longest straight stretch of highway in the United States is on Route 5, west from Dunseith, N. D. This road has no curves in it for approximately 50 miles.

Local Police Capture Noted Bad Check Artist

Ray Martinelli, 19, of 709 Brunswick street, San Francisco, who has been wanted by the San Francisco burglary detail for the past three months on a robbery and bad check charge, was arrested Tuesday by Chief of Police John T. Doyle.

Young Martinelli gave the clerk in the McMar store at 6073 Mission street, a pay check for $20 from the Angelus Stained Glass Studio, of 1414 Fifteenth street, on Wednesday, October 11. The clerk said she did not have the whole amount. Martinelli then took $10 in cash and credit for $10. The next day being a holiday, and the banks would be closed, he said, so he would be without funds, and was glad to get half of the money.

The manager of the McMar store called up the Angelus Stained Glass Studio to inquire if John Russel, whom Martinelli claimed to be, was employed by that firm. Charles A. Sampson, the manager, said Russel was unknown to him. Samon then checksd up the pay checks and found that some one had broken into the place of business and had stolen two blank checks, No. 226 and 227, one of which the youth had already cashed.

The San Francisco police turned the case over to the local police department. Young Martinelli was picked up by Chief of Police John T. Doyle from a description furnished by the burglary detail, while he was patroling the city.

Chief Doyle notified San Francisco police of the youth's arrest and that he had confessed to having broken into the Glass Studio and stole the checks.
